Henley Borough

'The town is pleasantly situated on the high road from London to Oxford, on a slight ascent from the banks of the river Thames...and is almost entirely surrounded by well-wooded heights; since the opening of the railway the town has become a very favourable and fashionable place of resort, more especially on account of the annual regatta held here every summer...A stone bridge of five arches, uniting..Henley with..Remenham [in Berks] was erected in 1786..The town was incorporated by Queen Elizabeth, but received a new charter 9 George I (1722) and a modern one 10th August, 1883; the corporation consists of a mayor, 4 aldermen and 12 councillors who also act as the Urban Sanitary Authority'

(extract from Kelly's Directory, 1895)

The Borough archives include:

- The Charters of Elizabeth I and George I 1568 & 1722
- A cartulary (parchment volume) given to the corporation in 1457 containing copies of the wills of benefactors and other documents relating to the manor, town, church and bridge 1260-1725
- Borough Assembly minutes dating from 1395
- Modern council and committee minutes until 1974 e.g. Henley Regatta
 Entertainment Committee 1910-1970
- A huge collection of corporation property deeds from c1250
- Taxation e.g. a Tallage volume of 1328 & a 16th century Subsidy List
- Quarter Sessions minute books 1723-1871
- Registers of victuallers licences (innkeepers) 1877-1918
- Henley Manor rental books 1694-1737

Where are these records?

Henley Borough archives are held at Oxfordshire History Centre.

Where is the catalogue?

Henley Borough archives can be searched online using Heritage Search

Visiting and contacting Oxfordshire History Centre.